MESSAGE

It is with great pride and pleasure that I welcome you all to the Faculty of Allied and Healthcare Sciences on the occasion of the Induction Day. This day signifies the commencement of a journey that will shape not only your academic pursuits but also your contribution to the healthcare system at large.

Allied Health Professionals are an integral part of the healthcare team. Their role extends far beyond technical support; they are the backbone of diagnostic, therapeutic, and rehabilitative services. From medical laboratory technologists, radiographers, physiotherapists, occupational therapists, to emergency and critical care technologists, each discipline plays a pivotal role in ensuring comprehensive and patient-centred care. In today's evolving healthcare scenario, where multidisciplinary collaboration is essential, the contribution of healthcare professionals is indispensable.

At our faculty, we are committed to nurturing your knowledge, skills, and professional values. The curriculum has been designed to provide a balance of theoretical understanding, hands-on training, and exposure to real clinical settings. Our dedicated faculty members and state-of-the-art facilities will guide you in developing competence, confidence, and compassion—qualities that define a successful healthcare professional.

As you embark on this noble journey, I encourage you to uphold the highest standards of integrity, empathy, and service to humanity. Remember, your work will not only support doctors and nurses but will also directly touch the lives of patients and their families, often in their most vulnerable moments.

I extend my heartfelt wishes for your success and hope that each one of you will emerge as a skilled, responsible, and compassionate allied healthcare professional, contributing to the advancement of medical science and the well-being of society.
